SUMMARY OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS

Jack Goldstein, the chief character of this story, was the son of a London merchant. When old enough he became a member of his father's firm, but as the result of a quarrel with the senior partner was forced to leave London to find his own way. He succeeded very well. The sudden and tragic death of his father proved a great shock to Jacob, and feeling the need of change and rest he went for a trip around the British Isles. His efforts to save a little girl from falling overboard resulted in a serious injury to his knee, which necessitated his stay in a hospital for several months. On his recovery he went to call on his fiancée, to whom he was to be married in a few days, and was stunned by the news that she had fallen down dead that morning. A further shock came to him when he discovered that affairs at the office were not brilliant, and he was sending for the uncle he had just married. Investigation proved that his fiancée's death had been fraudulently insured. After selling all his effects to pay his debts, he was left with less than twenty pounds.

CHAPTER XIV.

JACOB JOURNEYS TO AUSTRALIA

It did not take Jacob long to discover that there was a great difference between the life of a flourishing stock-broker with plenty of money and that of a practically penniless man without prospects. This fact was brought home to him in a particularly sharp and trying manner because he chanced to meet his old friend, Al. At first sight there would perhaps be a curdled greeting, but a recollection of the recent change in Jacob's circumstances would, as a rule, speedily follow, usually leading to one of the almost equally great change of manner. Presently such would scarcely recognise him when they passed; an eloquent and striking illustration of the difference which selfish and mercenary considerations rule the associations and companionships of the world.

"Can't Stand It!"

"Well, I can't stand this sort of thing any longer," said Jacob to his mother one day.

"I should think not," said that proud and haughty lady, "the proper place for failures is abroad, and I wonder that you have not departed long ago."

Mrs. Goldstein had never manifested any but the most formal sympathy for her poor son in his sorrows and misfortune. The stern of Mr. Goldstein's stern, and had protested her, it is true, but it was the loss of the expected fortune that troubled her most. When she heard of Jacob's roguery and the practical ruin of Jacob in consequence, she gave a contemptuous snarl and declared that Jacob was not half so smart a business man as his father, and she should have looked after his business better.

She felt keenly the loss of social privilege suffered by her son and was not backward in telling him that he had degraded the family name. Though well provided for herself, she was very touchy as to her means, and therefore had nothing the scenes and people who were connected with his previous life.

"What to do, however, he did not know. His small stock of money had well-nigh vanished, and he had not sufficient to pay his passage to even the nearest British destination."

At this juncture he met in touch with a gentleman named Adams, who offered him a somewhat humiliating situation in Perth, Western Australia.

"I have a dreary business to do there," said this gentleman, who was visiting his birthplace in England after an absence of thirty years, "and I can do with the services of a clerk. So book a passage out as soon as you can and report yourself to my manager."

Jacob was too proud to consent that he did not have the wherewithal to pay his passage or probably his new employer would have advanced it, and he left him to look in service. He thanked Mr. Adams, therefore, and he was not backward in telling him that he had degraded the family name. When the "Oceana" left her dock there were few who would have recognized in the smart steward who answered to the name of Stephens, with his polished coat, white jacket and dark trousers and clean-shaven face, the former Mr. Jacob Goldstein, member of the City of London.

get safely to land again, I reviewed my past life. My work as a Salvation Army Officer helped him to get to that moment I felt, 'If I do not come out of this, I know it will be all over for me.'

"When I boarded the 'Lass o' Gowrie,' it seemed to me that I received a mighty vision of the power of our blessed Army as I had never seen it before. Those earnest, Christlike travellers, who knew me perfectly well, were trying to play cards in the storm. One of them, as I approached, said, 'There he is now—our time, and then rethe street. Then an arm came to him. "Ah, I have him!" he exclaimed. "I will try to work my passage out as a steward."

Thinking of once to the effects of the Postmaster and Oriental Line, he secured

It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that a certain Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, who were passengers on the ship, had the suspicion that the young man was not allotted to wait on their table, but was other than their own nephew.

What Jacob thought of this was a surprise, but he did not say a word. He gave no further sign that he recognized them.

A Surprise for Both.

All went well until the voyage nearly ended. One day Stephens was on duty as cabin steward, his duties being to answer the call of any passenger who might ring for him. Now, it so happened that on this particular occasion Mrs. Nelson wanted some help with and rang for the steward. Jacob went to answer, without knowing when she it was, and the surprise of seeing the man whom he spotted the day before, off his guard, and he blurted out:

"What do you want, aunt?"

"Ah, I thought I knew you," said Mrs. Nelson. "But I was wrong. Now you have fairly given me away. Is this what you have come over to, is it?"

Jacob coloured, but he kept his head. "Well, you see, aunt, I had no choice but to find a situation in Australia," he said, "and I was doing my best to get a position to look after my aunt's passage, so I am working my passage out."

"Oh, is that so," said his aunt. "Well, Jacob, I must say I admire your pluck and I wish you every success. The ship will always be a convenient refuge for her willful and hot-headed nephew, and Jacob was quite pleased to hear sympathetic words from one of his own relatives.

"Thank you, aunt," he said, "but I am not, of course, reporting you to my mother in public. I did not mean to let you know who I was, but my surprise in finding you here made me blurt myself out."

Offered Him Money

Shortly afterwards the ship reached Perth and there Jacob met his old friend, Al. Before he did so his aunt said to him, "I thought perhaps that you would find this very handy in starting your new career, Jacob," she said, and she handed a five-pound note into his hand.

But Jacob's pride rose in revolt at this. "I would rather not accept money from my aunt," he said, "and I am sure you will find it a little thing that prompted you to offer me the money."

"An independent as ever, I say," said Mrs. Nelson. "Very well, Jacob, I understand your feelings, and I hope you will soon have a good many five-pound notes of your own."

So Jacob left farewell to his aunt and went ashore to commence a new life in a new country, with his sailing, his unwavering courage and a will to succeed.

On the following day he landed in Perth, where he landed up the manager of the dropery establishment that he had met in London.

The manager was a fairly tall, fair man named Balguy, who Jacob found to be a very different man from the one he had met in London.

"I am glad to see you," said Balguy, "and I am sure you will find it a very pleasant surprise to find me here. I am glad to see you, and I am sure you will find it a very pleasant surprise to find me here."

CANDIDATE FAREWELLS

From Vancouver IV—Mrs. Dine's Farewell to the Corps.

On Friday, Aug. 30th, a farewell party was given for Candidate Ensign Kathleen. After the supper several comrades spoke of her life and work in our midst. Among those who spoke were Ensign Lawrie, Band-of-Love Leader Mrs. Corrier, Brother L. Mattall (who has known her for several years), Mrs. Marshall and Brother Hanson.

On Saturday afternoon the children came in for their share of good things.

On Sunday morning we had with us Brigadier and Mrs. McLean, Commandant and Mrs. Habbick, three children from Victoria, also several Victoria comrades.

Two children were dedicated to God and the Army by Commandant Habbick.

Candidate Houghton from Victoria, read the Scriptures, and they each spoke of having given Him their all, and being determined to follow all the way.

In the afternoon the Candidate gave her final farewell, and words of comfort to the Young People.

Candidate Kaighin has very creditably held the position of Young People's Sergeant-Major for over twelve months, and the children are very fond of her.

The Candidate was also of great assistance in the Senior Corps, always willing to do whatever came to her hand and for the Master.

Her place will certainly be hard to fill, but we believe God has called and she has taken up the cross to follow whatever the cost.—Lillian Casler.

THREE SEEKERS

Come to Mercy Seat at Gannanoke A Social and Farewell

We are having good times at Gannanoke under the leadership of our new Officers, Captain and Mrs. Thompson. On Thursday evening a very spiritual talk was given by Christ as her own personal Saviour.

At our week-end meeting, two ladies, man and wife, returned unaccompanied to the fold.

A local paper thus reported a recent happening: "On Tuesday evening the social and farewell, arranged for by Captain and Mrs. Thompson, for Ensign Trium who was not able to farewell properly before, being obliged to leave the Corps hurriedly to submit to an operation, was largely attended by both comrades and friends. It was an excellent idea of the local Officers of arranging such an evening, because it would have been impossible for the Ensign to have visited everyone, as her physical condition would not have permitted it. The Ensign and family were accompanied by some of the Kingston Corps, arrived by about eight o'clock.

The social programme which had been arranged by the local Officers was started by the singing of song No. 10, "O God Our Help in Ages Past," and prayer.

"After the programme, which was much enjoyed by those present, cake and coffee was served, followed by a short address and message from the Ensign."

COLLECTED AT MINE

And Smashed Target Four Times

The meetings at Cobalt were well attended all day Sunday. At night the real, old-time power was felt in the service.

Lieutenant Walker sang a solo, accompanied by her harp. Captain Bridge also soloed.

The Lieutenant took the Lesson and spoke with much power. At the close of the service three souls were made their way to the penitential form, which was the cause of a real rejoicing.

We had started in our Harvest Festival collecting, which we don't intend to let go under. Our young Convert, Brother Holsberg, who is a Swede, and only got saved a few weeks ago, took a target of five dollars to collect at the Mine where he works, and he has smashed it four times—Treasurer Young.

In Memorial Service for Adjutant Robinson at Ottawa I

We are marching on to victory at Ottawa I under the leadership of Adjutant and Mrs. Osborne. Sunday, Sept. 15th, was a day of victory and blessing to us all. At night a memorial service was held for Captain Robinson who was killed in action. A number of comrades who knew him spoke of his Godly and consistent life and of the blessing he had been to them during his stay in Ottawa. Adjutant Osborne urged on those present the necessity of being ready when death should overtake them, and made plain the way of Salvation. At the close of the meeting we rejoiced over twenty souls kneeling at the foot of the Cross for Salvation and reconciliation. On Thursday night we had with us Adjutant O'Neill and Lieutenant Mitchell of No. 11 Corps. The Lieutenant led a bright, happy testimony meeting.—M. S.
